This is a song where you'll learn about the different people in world history who have been involved with war. It has a very good beat to it and some fun lyrics. It starts off talking about ancient Rome and what they would do for land, then it moves onto medieval times where Christianity was trying to conquer paganism or something like that. They talk about japan in World War 2 and how America's involvement caused Hiroshima to happen which killed many people from fire bombs from nuclear weapons from us back then also. The next song talks about America's involvement in the Vietnam War. The song is very good and has a fun beat to it. Then it continues on talking about the Cold War and how the United States involved itself with other countries sometimes not meaning what they say or do, so you should understand that. Lastly, you will hear about the state of war today. It ends with "The state of war will haunt you" so if you don't like war then either turn off your tv or just stop listening to this song because it's affecting your mind. I think this song is amazing because it really tells people history and teaches them some things they might not otherwise know. This song is very important because it's giving us a gist of history. This song is extremely good when it comes to teaching history. It also means when you learn history, this is what you'll be learning and pretty much how the world was and how we came about to where we are today. Without this song, I honestly don't know if we would've learned the different things we learned in this album and who helped make the world we live in today better or worse. I got this album after looking at reviews on other sites such as amazon and google play.
